When you are in need of a family law attorney, you want someone with extensive litigation and trial experience. You want a fearless advocate with a competitive spirit. Someone who is well respected by members of the Bar and the Judiciary. Someone with expertise in all areas of family law, including divorce, child custody, support, property division, modifications and enforcements, and contempt. You want an attorney like Nicole Whyte, founding principal of the firm Bremer, Whyte, Brown & O'Meara.

Bremer, Whyte, Brown & O'Meara is a full-service law firm with 75 attorneys specializing in all areas of the law. Ms. Whyte notes this is an asset to clients since family law touches on virtually every aspect of the law; and it is always helpful to have in-house experts readily available. When it comes to complex family issues, Ms. Whyte brings a unique sense of empathy and caring to each case, highly valued attributes in the emotional minefield of divorce cases.

"As a wife and mother of four young children myself, I personally understand the issues that clients face when dealing with custody and related matters that arise in a divorce," she says. "I have been effective in adopting a collaborative approach in many cases where I have succeeded in reaching early and cost effective resolutions. When a case cannot be resolved, I have the fortitude, tenacity and experience to succeed at trial with an approach that couples relentless preparation with zealous and fearless advocacy."

Ms. Whyte's broad based litigation and trial experience, coupled with 20 years of practice in California and overseas, distinguishes her in terms of expertise and experience. She has successfully litigated hundreds of complex multi-million dollar lawsuits and has been awarded the highest accolade in Martindale Hubbell, an AV rating, which signifies the highest legal abilities and unquestionable professional ethics.

"I strive to keep my clients' interests at heart and reach timely resolutions of challenging situations," she explains. "I provide individualized hands on counseling and representation in all areas of Family Law, listening carefully to my clients' problems to provide representation that is both thoughtful and effective."

A native of Johannesburg, South Africa, Ms. Whyte has also served as mediator and settlement officer for the local Superior Courts.
